SATURDAY, OCT. 6, 1875.

THE MASSACHUSETTS CAMPAIGN.

The very enthusiastic and auspicious opening of the Massachusetts State Campaign by the Republicans of Boston, on Thursday evening, betokens earnest work on their part, and that this year their strength will not be turned to the advantage of the Democracy. Of the meeting in Faneuil Hall the Advertiser speaks as follows:

The Republican campaign in Massachusetts was opened brilliantly last evening with one of the most crowded and rousing new meetings ever held in Faneuil Hall. The moment that the doors were opened multitudes flocked in filling every available inch of space, until the entire edifice was full, many leaving for want of room. The northern gallery was occupied by ladies and those accompanying them, and the eastern and southern galleries were completely packed till the police forbade further entrance. The first regiment band played appropriate airs while the audience was gathering, and the people rushed in with tokens evincing unusual interest. A large number of seats were reserved on and around the platform, which were occupied by invited guests from all over the State, and the speakers who came in a body from the ante-rooms.

The audience was enthusiastic and responsive, and as the Hon. Richard H. Dana ascended the platform he was cordially welcomed. At every mention of the name of Rice there was loud applause. There was evidently a considerable number of Democrats in attendance, whose conduct was certainly decorous, but who couldn't help a slight recognition by way of applause when the name of Governor Gaston was spoken. The multitude present were fully charged with enthusiasm, and the telling points of the eloquent speakers fell upon sympathizing hearts and willing ears, so that altogether the meeting reminded one of the great political gathering of other days. It was a token that the coming campaign will be a lively one and will do much to arouse the Republicans of the State to vigorous action.

The Journal in its comments on the meeting, says:

The full report we give of the grand Republican Ratification Meeting in Faneuil Hall last night will demonstrate to the rest of the Commonwealth that Mr Rice's neighbors and fellow citizens fully appreciate the honor conferred upon them and mean to do their share to make his election secure. The full force of the demonstration, however, could only have been apprehended by those who attended the meeting and marked its character. Although the weather was threatening and the call had been published but a short time, the gathering in point of numbers was all that could have been wished, and in enthusiasm it was far ahead of what might have been expected in the campaign which, we are told, presents no little of novel or vital interest. The Republicans of Boston evidently think otherwise. The best of them not only turn out in full force at the first opportunity to participate in the campaign, but by the earnest attention given to all the speakers, as well as the hearty and discriminating applause, they testify that they comprehend all the bearings of the contest and will leave none of its duties unperformed.

The speeches as reported in our columns will speak for themselves, and where all are so good it might seem invidious to particularize. The address of Mr Rice, however, will necessarily attract special attention—and it will deserve and repay it by the breadth and soundness of its views of the pertinency of the topics discussed, and the personality disclosed in the whole style and tone of the speech. The Republicans of Massachusetts may well feel proud of their candidate, especially when they have the assurance of his long public record that he has shone less by his speech-making than by his practical, executive qualities.

Now that Boston, as becomes the home of our candidate, has fitly spoken, let the Republicans in the other sections of the Commonwealth take up the response and give the whole country an idea of what we intend to do. As our opposition friends have had considerable to say about our being distracted and discouraged, a public word or two here and there may well be bestowed as a preliminary to the decisive demonstration we shall give them at the ballot-box.

The N. Y. Times says that reports from Ohio continue to be reasonably assuring. Canvasses of the doubtful counties end the Republican managers to expect a decisive majority for "Hayes and Hodges." As the day of election draws near, the financial question gains more and more attention, and all others become subordinate to it. No more earnest campaign has ever been waged in the State since the war than the present. It is a hopeful sign for the future that the people of Ohio are ready to give ear to a discussion of the kind that has been going on for two months. It is not an ordinary one. It involves not only material interests, but moral considerations of the highest importance, and largely by the courage and good sense of General Woodford, of this State, the canvass has been turned explicitly on this class of considerations. Nothing could exceed the issues involved, and the result will be looked forward to with great anxiety in every part of the country, nor will it be without a very serious influence on our credit abroad.

The Government of Mr Disraeli seems to have got itself into a dreadfully unpleasant predicament by the recent Admiralty circular prescribing the duties of naval officers towards fugitive slaves. They are not only commanded to surrender to their owners slaves who come aboard their ships in foreign ports, but if they pick up a fugitive slave on the high seas it is made their duty, on entering the territorial limits to which he belongs, to surrender him on proper demand. This is not only an outrage upon human freedom, but it is a surrender of what Englishmen dearly prize—the doctrine of the territoriality of ships. The whole British press is attacking it with fury. Of course the circular will have to be withdrawn; how it came to be issued seems to be one of those things which no fellow can find out.

Siberia is to be the next country to be provided with a University. The Russian Minister of Finance has seen his way towards making a grant for the purpose, and it is hoped that the action of the State will be supported by private liberality. There has always been, says the London Athenæum, a great lack of medical men in the sparsely scattered townships of Siberia; and, for the first at least, the University will chiefly promote the study of medicine. It is to be established at Tomsk.

The most encouraging symptoms of revival of business is to be found in the export of grain to Europe, which is now going from New York very freely. The Great Britain will require rather more than the average quantity of wheat, this year, is now a well ascertained fact; our surplus is large; at present prices are such that large amounts are coming forward [illegible] West, as it takes for shipment. But [illegible] requirements of his interest persons, will become clear, and [illegible] date at so way into the market for the [illegible] purchase of prosperity. Agriculture this year has both elements. If no individual or municipality were in debt, the farmers would be, on some [illegible] rich; when they are well-off, everybody and all our machinery, has smooth [illegible] ed, and at fair pay. How far our [illegible] will go toward making those who raise them pecuniarily independent, it is difficult to say, but they will do something toward it, and that is so far a hope-inspiring fact.

A disease which has greatly perplexed the doctors in and about Schaghticoke Point, N. Y., has been making frightful havoc among the children at that place. Some twenty-six deaths have occurred within a month. Children under fifteen are the only persons attacked by the epidemic. It was supposed at first that the disease was diphtheria, but the symptoms seem to indicate cerebro-spinal meningitis.

There has been thus far this year an excess of rain, up to September 1st, of nearly thirteen inches, and to October 1st of eleven and one-half inches, over the average of the last forty years; and yet the streams are low, and the ground is by no means wet. There is yet considerable rain to fall to restore the equilibrium, and we ought to have a mild winter to compensate for the cold one which destroyed two and three years ago so many of our vines and trees. For September the wind was from the westward quarter nineteen days, and westerly wind is the prevailing one in this vicinity.

The San Francisco Bulletin says that Oregon is this year coming prominently forward as an exporter of wheat. The harvest season there corresponds with that of England, while the winters are milder than those of that country. None of the states have larger bodies of good wheat land. In the Willamette and Umpqua valleys it possesses some 2,752,000 acres of land fit for cultivation, of which at least 638,000 acres are good for wheat. At the low average of 25 bushels to the acre these two valleys have a capacity for 17,200,000 bushels a year, with three-fourths of that area for other crops and use. One million and a half bushels would be a liberal allowance for home supply and seed; leaving for export 15,700,000 bushels. These figures do not represent what is yielded, but what might be obtained under proper development of existing advantages. What is needed is the means of marketing the products, and the country is admirably adapted to railroad construction it appears that only enterprise is needed to make Oregon the wheat country of the future. Hitherto the people have had no facilities for marketing their crops and but little incentive to surplus production. Their swine have been as regularly fattened on wheat as those of Indiana on corn.

Captain John Norris, aged eighty-four years, a citizen of Petersburg, Kentucky, and the only survivor of the American sailors who fought with Commodore Perry in the battle of Lake Erie, has promised to be present at the Philadelphia Centennial Exhibition next year. The veteran has a gold medal voted to him by Congress in 1860 for his services in the battle. After the conflict Commodore Perry wrote to General Harrison that but for the twenty men the latter had sent him—of whom Captain Norris was one—he could not have gained his victory.

The public will generally approve the action of Judge Barnes of Dakota, who charged the Grand Jury to take notice of some gross libel on the Secretary of War, which were thrust in his face on his arrival. The Judge said: "If the Secretary of War, who is charged with crimes of the most famous kind is guilty, the American people should know it, and justice should not stay its hand, and to the end that justice may be done those who make these charges should be required to make them good or suffer the consequences." Secretary Belknap is hardly the sort of man his assailants described.

The Chinese in San Francisco are inveterate smugglers, and conduct operations on an extensive and constantly increasing scale, resorting to all kinds of ingenious devices to outwit the revenue officers. Silk and opium are the principal articles smuggled, the profit on a successful operation with the latter commodity yielding a handsome sum. During the year 1873-4, the amount of goods seized on steamers and vessels from China amounted to about $25,000. Since March this year the seizures have amounted to about $40,000. The largest seizure for years past was made recently by Capt. Fowles, Night Inspector. He had his suspicions aroused about some eighty-five boxes landed from a China steamer, invoiced as oil. An order of examination was obtained, which resulted in the discovery of a very large quantity of opium in the boxes, which, on being examined, was valued at about $35,000 and was forfeited. Another seizure was recently made by Capt. Reddea, and the goods consisted of 500 pounds of opium, worth $8,950, which had been concealed in ale barrels.

A writer in the old Philadelphia Packet, in 1780, shows how inflation works in a style that is interesting even now to "plain people," to use President Lincoln's phrase:

"I had money enough to buy a hogshead of sugar. I sold it again and got a good deal more money than it cost me; yet what I sold it for, when I went to market again, would buy but a piece. I sold that, too, for a great deal of profit, yet the whole of what I sold it for would afterward buy but a barrel. I have now more money than ever I had, and yet I am not so rich as when I had less. I am sure we shall grow poorer and poorer unless we fall on some method to lower prices, and then the money we have to spare will be worth something."

The Ohio correspondent of the New York Times writes:

"As to how the State will go next Tuesday, I can only say that the opinion of those best prepared to judge is one of serene confidence in Republican success. Senator Sherman, who has been all over the State, regards Hayes' election as good as certain. The chairman of the Republican State Committee, who has reports of canvasses in most of the doubtful counties, counts on 25,000 majority. It is conceded that if the Western Reserve gives Hayes 30,000 majority he will beat Uncle Wilson by at least that much, for the remainder of the State is thought sure to cast about an even vote in the aggregate."

An absurd report that King Kalakaua had been rendered seriously ill by the appearance in the harbor of Honolulu of a shoal of red fish, and occurrence which popular superstition in the Sandwich Islands has associated with the death of some member of the royal family, proves to be entirely unfounded. The King has merely been afflicted with a severe cold, from which he has nearly recovered.

A citizen of St. Joseph, Mo., has a complete set of the first year's numbers of the first official journal published in the United States. The paper was called The Gazette of the United States, and the first number was published in the then village of New York, when Congress assembled in April, 1789. It contained the proceedings of the first Congress, and gives an account of Gen. Washington's inauguration, stating that "he was escorted across the ferry from Jersey-first the barge by thirteen pilots dressed in white uniforms." There is mention therein of the meeting of the Indian chieftains, with whom a treaty of peace was concluded, and the Indians received only 50 cents for a bushel of corn! [illegible] nouncement that he is supporting it made in the stages, [illegible] be furnished with the Gazette in the State [illegible] lieved that the only [illegible] the Gazette [illegible] in the State [illegible] brary at Albany.

Congressman Waddell of North Carolina has come out as a rampant inflationist, and is publishing long letters for the purpose of convincing his people of the soundness of his views. He prefaces his first letter with the entirely unnecessary statement that he is not a "financier." After reading his letter no one will think of calling him one.

The Augusta, Ga., correspondent of the Courier-Journal says that money matters are rapidly improving in all the cotton towns of the Southern States. The planters are in better condition to "hold back" their crop than at any period since the war. Heretofore they have had it so heavily mortgaged that they were forced to sell for whatever price offered, these mortgages always maturing prior to the 15th of October. This placed a great percentage on the market, depressing and breaking it down to a very low figure. Now, however, the planters are very little, comparatively speaking, in debt.

WHAT IS THERE IN A NAME?

A good name is a capital to a manufacturer, and should not be kept from the public that may wish to know where to find his productions and KNOW that they are his when offered for sale.

The subscriber has made it a specialty to manufacture Ladies' Fine Boots and Shoes for over FORTY YEARS in Boston, and for THIRTY of that time retailed them from his own counter. For the past TWELVE years, a very large part of them have been retailed by two of the most popular shoe dealers on Washington street, HENRY H. TUTTLE & CO. and T. E. MOSELEY & CO., and these two firms alone have had over SIX HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS' worth from the subscriber's factory for the best and most popular trade. THE DEATH PENALTY.

Hanging of Pemberton.

The Usual Preparations.

BOSTON, Oct. 8. George W Pemberton, the murderer of Mrs. Bingham, in East Boston, last March, was executed to-day, at 10 55 o'clock, at the Suffolk County Jail. The preparations were of the usual character. Pemberton's last interview with his wife and children left him in an unsettled state of mind, and he was unable to eat any supper and but little breakfast. At half-past eight he was taken into the parlor of the Sheriff's house, and a season of prayer succeeded. At half-past nine the public services took place. Rev Dr. Lorimer read selections of the Scriptures and a prayer followed. At fifty-eight minutes past nine o'clock a procession was formed and

Proceeded to the Gallows

While Sheriff Clark was reading the warrant, Mr Bradley bound the criminal and placed the black cap upon his head and the noose around his neck. Rev Dr. Lorimer then offered a brief prayer, and the drop fell at three minutes past ten o'clock. The body quivered very slightly, the fall being eight feet, and there were no unpleasant sensations among the spectators, unless it may have been that caused by the fainting of one man in the first gallery. After a few comments Drs John H McCullom, Joseph S. Jones and Horace Chase made an examination of the body and decided that death was occasioned by a concussion of the brain and must have been instantaneous. This afternoon the body is to be delivered to Mrs. Pemberton, who will see that it is suitably buried, although she does not desire to make public the place of interment.

THE PEMBROKE MURDER.

Excitement over the Case Renewed.

CONCORD, Oct. 8. The excitement over the Pembroke murder case has been revived to-day by various rumors which have been in circulation. At an early hour this morning Josiah Carpenter, of Pittsfield, went to Suncook and informed the officers of some facts, which, if true, will have an important bearing on the case. The story told was to the effect that Miss Lake, who some three years ago taught school in Pembroke, and has since married, arrived at her home in Chichester on the day succeeding the murder.

A Story by Miss Lake.

Her mother informed her that Josiah Langmaid had been murdered and related the account of the crime. Miss Lake, who had previously heard of the murder, exclaimed, "I know who did it—it was Bill Drew."

She then said that the Langmaid girl had some time before told her that Drew had meeted her, and upon her threatening to tell her father, he told her that if she did he would kill her and would cut her into inch pieces. Mr. Hildreth sent a man over to Chichester to her home to ascertain about the matter, and she is to be present at the coroner's inquest to-morrow morning to testify.

Threats said to have been Uttered by Drew.

It is said Mr Langmaid in a conversation this afternoon said Miss Lake had taught school in Pembroke some three years ago, and had boarded at his house. After her departure some letters had passed between her and his daughter Josie, but that they had not met for a year, he thought, unless very recently, when his wife and daughter drove over to her house in Chichester. He did not express any decided opinion as to the guilt of Drew.

Drew Asserts his Innocence

In an interview with Drew this afternoon he asserted his innocence and said he was at work with his father laying a stone wall till 11 o'clock on the morning of the murder, when he went to Suncook to summon a doctor for his mother who had injured herself with a pitchfork, was informed of the murder after he had returned at night, also asserted that he had not seen the Langmaid girl for 6 years and would not have known her if he had met her on the street.

The Kenduskeag Cheese Factory Associations have closed operations at their factory, after running four months. They have 1386 cheeses, of an average weight of 48 pounds, or thirty-three tons in all; using 348 tons of milk, for which they have paid about $7800. They have now on hand between eight and nine hundred cheeses, for which there is good demand. The supply of milk ranged from 2000 to 7300 pounds per day.

Orono Horticultural Fair.

The Orono Horticultural Exhibition, which has been in progress for the past three days, is a most satisfactory and complete affair. There is a table on each side of the Town Hall, in which the Fair is held, and they are principally loaded with apples of all kinds and descriptions. Mr. Bennock is the largest exhibitor of fruit, having brought seventy varieties of apples raised in his orchard. It is really painful to look at the beautiful fruit displayed by him. Several large "Alexanders" were particularly noticeable among his several varieties. Mr. E. Rigby exhibited ten plates of apples, among them the "Flemish Beauty" would most readily attract one's notice. Mr. F. D. Webster is also a large contributor, having twenty-one different varieties on exhibition. He also contributed a number of plates of pears and grapes, which are of a superior order. Mr. Eben Webster makes a very fine display of his fruit, exhibiting thirty-eight plates of apples, and E B Sutton exhibited forty-five varieties of apples. There a large number of smaller contributors, but Nelson Antone deserves much credit for his display, as gentlemen who are conversant with the circumstances say that he is entitled to the highest praise. There is a fine display of out door grapes, raised in Mr. Fred Perkins's garden, at Oldtown. He also has a plate of currants picked the 6th of this month. A large and very beautiful floral monument stands in the centre of the right hand table. The display of squashes, potatoes, etc., is not very large, but the quality is good. The fancy work is on a table placed on the stage, and to one who is an admirer of nicely executed needlework, the display is very gratifying. Miss Annie King exhibited some very handsome worsted work, and Miss A. J. Butler's worsted work was also very superior. The articles exhibited by Miss Annie McGee were very creditable. There was but one painting on exhibition, executed by Miss Annie McLellan; it is painted with considerable taste and skill. Miss Kittie Buffum exhibited a number of crayon drawings, and in particular—"The Challenge"—deserves much praise, as it shows her to possess a remarkable amount of natural taste and ability, which she should not fail to cultivate. We should be glad to speak of the articles exhibited in detail; but it is sufficient to say that all were highly commendable. The display of fruit is pronounced equal to that of the State Fair. No prizes are awarded, but a committee report the names of those who deserve favorable mention for their displays. Mr. B P G Hunt received favorable mention for his display of corn, pumpkins, turnips, beets, squashes, carrots and parsnips; Mr. S. Peaslee also received favorable mention, together with a number of other gentlemen, for their exhibition of garden products. The Agricultural College exhibits a large assortment of garden products. There were two entries of butter, by Mrs. Bennock and Mrs. Harriet Colburn. That exhibited by Mrs. Bennock is pure Jersey butter, of rich golden color and of pure, sweet flavor. The exhibition will continue through to-day, and it will be well worth the time and trouble of our citizens to visit their Orono friends.

The Hammond Street Church.

Services will be held in the audience room of the Hammond Street Church, to-morrow, Rev. S. P. Fay will preach a discourse in the forenoon appropriate to the re-opening of the house, and Prof. John S. Sewall will preach in the evening. The choir will sing appropriate selections.

A desire had long been felt by the members of the church to refit and adorn the audience room, and last Spring the movement was set on foot in good earnest. Church sociables were instituted for the purpose of raising funds, and entertainments of various kinds were held for the purpose of increasing them. The ladies were indefatigable in their efforts, and have not rested till the desired end was accomplished.

The frescoing of the church has been executed by Mr. Peter Ackerman, of this city, and the work is of so high an order that any commendation by us seems unnecessary. The main shade of the ceiling is pink, inclosing scroll work in imitation of stucco; outside of this is a shade of blue, surrounded by purple panels laid in with umber shade. Then come mouldings of various colors bordering on some very tasty panel work in silver gray. The whole is inclosed with heavy buff mouldings. The cornice is laid in with various tints, and the walls are of a dark buff tint, and finished up in heavy mouldings and arches. The pulpit end of the room is adorned with frescoes; those on the sides being laid in with large panels and surrounded by heavy mouldings. In the centre arch, directly in rear of the pulpit, Mr Ackerman has worked a very tasty design in imitation of a second arch; this arch is surrounded by heavy mouldings, and also has a finish of pillars, panelled with a round centre piece. The seats and other wood work of the room has been very much improved by several coats of paint. The whole house has received a thorough house cleaning, and the change is almost astonishing.

Rev. J. L. Phillips, the returned missionary from India, lectured in the Institute chapel, Thursday evening, Oct. 7. Owing to the bad weather only few were present. Mr. Phillips spoke for nearly an hour, telling about the manners and customs of the people among whom he has labored for the past ten years. He also gave a brief description of the various languages used by them, and sang several of their native hymns, as well as others which had been translated from the English. His entire discourse was much enjoyed by the audience, which would willingly have listened to him another hour. It is hoped that he will speak here again at some future time.

At the joint meeting of the E. L. B. Library and Antelopian Societies the following question was discussed: "Resolved, That we have more to fear from Ostheoldism than from Ostheoldism." After the discussion, it was decided in the negative by a vote of 46 to 38. On the question of the Antelopian the following question was discussed: "Should a representative be sent to the world's fair exhibition?"

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

(OCTOBER TERM.)

HON. JOHN A. PETERS, Justice Presiding.
EZRA G. BUCKNAM, Esq., Clerk.
FUEL SMITH, Esq., Stenographer.

Friday, Oct. 8. The case John Ross vs. William H. Smith; action on the case to recover for driving certain logs for plaintiff. Defendant denied any contract with plaintiff, but set up that the contract was made with Aaron Ingalls to drive the logs. Plaintiff replied that he did it upon the credit of defendant, and endeavored to prove that he promised to pay plaintiff for his services upon the logs and ratified his contract with Ingalls. The case went to the Jury at five o'clock, and they returned a verdict for plaintiff for $90 22. W. S. Clark for plaintiff, Brown & Simpson for defendant.

The case Charles H Bennett vs. Manuel S. Drummond et al. is on trial. It is an action of assumpsit to recover for sawing about 20,000 feet of lumber in 1868, unaccounted for on settlement in December of that year, also some other small items.

According to announcement made by the Court in the forenoon, His Honor Judge Peters, on the coming in of the Court in the afternoon, delivered the opinion of the full Court in the matter of the proceedings of the Penobscot Bar against Benjamin Kimball for his removal from the office of an attorney in the Courts of the State. The opinion was drawn by Judge Dickerson, and its reading was listened to with great interest by a full Bar in attendance, and a numerous audience besides. It was a very able, clear and exhaustive exposition of the duties and responsibilities of an attorney in the Courts. The following is the rescript of the opinion and the order of Court:

Rescript. Abram Sanborn petitioner, vs Benjamin Kimball. An attorney at law is an officer of the Court, and subject to the power of removal for misconduct, ascertained and determined by the Court, after an opportunity to be heard has been afforded.

The statute makes a good moral character a prerequisite or admission to the bar, and which an attorney at law has forfeited his claim to such character by such misconduct, professional or non-professional in or out of the Court, as renders him unworthy to associate with gentlemen and unable and unfit to be entrusted with the powers, duties and responsibilities of the legal profession, the Court may deprive him of the power and opportunity to do further injury, under the color of his profession, by removing him from the Bar.

The evidence in this case conclusively establishes the allegation in the motion that "the Respondent has been guilty of gross moral turpitude in that it shows that he has committed a fraud upon the Court, violated his professional oath and duty, conducted dishonestly in his private dealings, and disregarded the proprieties and civilities due to other members of the profession.

Be it adjudged that the respondent be stricken from the Bar, the Court held him out to be publicly unworthy of confidence and patronage, in the line of his profession, by reason of the power of removal vested in the Court, to allow the respondent to continue to exercise his profession, after he has been thus publicly stamped as an attorney of his office, would be indirectly to impeach the Court in the responsibility of his acts. And further, after the disclosures in this case, the Court would be forbidden to pronounce the judgment of removal from office against the respondent without abdicating the high trust which the law confers on us. In this belief and rendering that a nullity. The judgment must therefore be "Respondent removed from the office of an attorney at law, in all the Courts in this State."—Dickerson, J.

At the close of the reading of the opinion Mr. Kimball gave notice of a petition for a review of the case, stating that the Court would, he thought, learn that it had made a great mistake.

[The decision, which will be of much interest to members of the Penobscot Bar will be published in full in Monday's issue.—ED.]

The Bridgewater cheese factory closed operations Saturday, September 18th, and has made over twelve tons of nice cheese. It received over one thousand pounds of milk the day it closed.

HOW SHE WAS WON.

BY W. D. EDMONDS.

"Is that all?" exclaimed Dick. "Well, I'll allow that story might have scared the wits out of me when I was a boy, grandfather; but now, bah! Je suis Phomme! It's only amusing. What say you pretty Kate (here, so intent on those coals? And Tom? Why, look at Tom! he looks as sad as though the old hobgoblin had him by the throat at this very moment.

"Well," said Kate, slowly and patting the fender with her little feet, "I'm glad that I m a woman, and free from the horrid old governess's grudge. I've heard that story before —Mat s told that to me half a dozen times."

Here Tom stretched himself, looking intently at the fire, and grumbled out, "I wish I had a pipe."

Aunt Miranda shrugged her shoulders deprecatingly.

"If the dragoon had never smoked Thomas," said she, pertinently, "he might never have broken the poor governess's neck in the door, and Jones would have been a tame old man to-day. Smoking always leads to drinking and this is a good example of what comes of it."

"Spare me aunt," muttered Tom

"Oh, yes, spare him," cried Dick, mockingly. Let him have a pipe. I will quiet your nerves, eh Tom, my old boy? I wouldn't wonder they're unstrung at the thought of having to sleep to-night on the old hag s hunting-grounds. I say, Tom, you believe in ghosts and spirits now, don t you?

Thou all looked at Tom, who was still gazing gloomily at the coals.

"Well Dick," said he very soberly "I really can't make up my mind whether I do or not. The more one thinks about the communication from the spiritual world, the harder it is for him to believe either pro or con. Why, cousin, there is some unanswerable evidence of such communications. We discussed the whole matter quite seriously, under Doctor Ambourn, senior wrangler, under Doctor Ambourn, senior wrangler, and were all of us obliged to leave it an open question even the Doctor himself who has thought of it more or less during a lifetime.

"Oh, fudge" cried Dick. "It was an open question with me until I came of age I settled it then once and for all. Ghosts are impossible. They are only the phantoms of one s own thoughts, and if I ever thought I saw one, I'd show you how I'd dispose of it short metre

"Un phantom c'est quine pensee
You know

"Pour le cuer, pensez aussi chose
I'd merely think of Kate here, for instance and the demured damp disagreeable corpse would scurry away fast enough. Spare me a ghost! Oh, that's too rich. Why, Tom, you are no more fool believer in them I really believe you get half crazed, thinking away in this dull country town of yours with nothing better to do. Come and live in New York. I'll show you life there, and shake all such nonsense out of you in a hurry. To think of no such things, to think very little, in fact, to enjoy life as we find it, Tom mon ami, that is the sort of life that makes a man happy, bold and brave. I've tried it, and I know

"Well I won't argue it with you," said Tom. I'm going to bed. Good night to all," and he stalked out of the room.

"Thomas has got some queer notions," said Aunt Miranda, sawing and rasping. He should have chosen the Missionary Field, and then the poor boy would have been all right. Good-night, Richard and Catherine I hope you will not lose the moral of that story

Then Kate seeing the prospect of a tete-a-tete with Dick, which she did not want just yet thought she felt more tired to sit than ever before after his brave speech—all on Kate rose too, and saying good night went off with her aunt.

The three gentlemen proved poor company, and soon followed the others' example, and the fire was left as it had been thousands of times before in that old chimney to glow and sputter undisturbed, and shake its dying light over the empty chairs huddled around it over the old portraits, and under the lofty ceiling —

II.

Kate went to her room, where Mat was waiting for her, and straight way sat down on the side of the bed with an unusually wrinkled brow and a pout that indicated intense thought

Mat yawned lowdly, as a hint at the lateness of the hour

"I'm not going to bed until I settle something in my mind, Mat. You may go if you wont to. I'll take care of myself."

Mat wondered long, but seeing no signs of progress, departed rubbing her eyes

Oh, I must make up my mind," sighed Kate. "Dick is the finest fellow To-night proved that and yet—yet I'm just a little suspicious of his boasting There, to be frank with myself I really haven t perfect confidence in him.

"I want to trust him But I have confidence in that stupid Tom? Yes—as far as he goes. But that don t seem to be much. Tom has decided on nothing yet this hand s like a boy s, ready to receive any new argument, while Dick's is all settled and made up. See how decided and manly Dick was to-night, while poor Tom acted almost like a fool. Of course there was no ghost. Ghosts—what if the old governess should s at those two fellows to-night! How I would like to see what they'd do! Then I should know them. I couldn't have a better test than that, could I

"Oh, I have it" she cried, springing up "I'll be the governess myself! What a happy thought.

She ran to the closet and dragged out some antique finery once gloried in by departed Miss Dexters, laid up there and sacredly preserved for—charades

She donned bonnet dress, and cloak She drew on a pair of huge antique black gloves, that gave her little hands a terribly throat-clutching air She tied a green veil over her face nose-high, and painted her brows and cheeks in blue and black water colors from the box in her escritoire. Then she reviewed herself in the glass, and started half frightened by the intense air of strangulation

"That will do" she cried And then, without pausing to think she hurried out of the door into the hall, toward Dick's room.

(And now dear readers, I beg you a favor. Forgive Kate the impropriety of the act Consider what she was,—only sixteen, motherless from babyhood, an innocent country-bred girl, who had not yet learned the cause si, fausts of society, nor the reasons for them. Tom and Dick had scarcely grown out, of being her playmates. She saw no impropriety in what she did Had she done so, let us believe that she would not now be walking as a ghost into Dick's room, anxious as she was of proving him Do her the justice, dear readers, of believing she was consistent with herself, and true to her simple little code of etiquette and morals, and that is all her best friends will ask.)

Dick had retired but by no means so free from mingling on the subject of ghosts as his speeches in the drawing-room had inferred. As the winter wind howled in the chimney and around the corners of the house, those very thought-ghosts too, which he had disbelieved, began to howl weirdly through the brain, and what it very and for us to chronicle, other thoughts would not prevail against them, and even the thought of bewitching cousin Kate. He had attempted to lock the door in vain, and growing momentarily more impressed with the possibility of the disturbing old governess, had finally leaped into bed, in hopes of keeping from the unpleasant fancy in sleep. Alas for his theory! he found that he could master the ghosts by thought only by adding himself entirely altogether. Poor Dick! he was just thinking into a very welcome little nap, when the opening of Tom's door roused him. With [illegible] he heard [illegible] the hall, and [illegible] into the march. He only hoped she would not see him. His wits were well-nigh gone. He listened. Step—step—step. The old hag was traversing the room straight in the direction of the bed.

"Right for me," groaned Dick.

The step ceased. Dick knew the corpse was standing over his bed. Nay, more, he felt the cold of a stick unmercifully plaking him down. Then a voice, hollow as the reverberation of a tomb, came to his muffled ears —

"Man dost thou believe in ghosts?"

"Yes, yes, anything," groaned Dick.

"Knowest thou who I am?"

"Yes, yes, the old murdering governess. Oh—ah. I beg pardon—I mean—I mean the innocent young beauty that was slaughtered by that base dragoon."

"Man, I do not propose to strangle thee with these hands."

"Oh, don't, don't! spare me, for Heaven's sake. Oh—ah—(he was suffocating under the bedclothes). O good Miss—s—s, I'll make any sacrifice. Oh let me off for my mother's sake."

"Man, thou lovest the young damsel of this house, dost thou not?"

"Oh, yes, yes! spare me," from Dick, in expiring tones.

"Man, promise me thou wilt relinquish her utterly, and so I please me, I may spare thy wretched life by coffin nails, how my fingers itch to clutch thy neck!"

"Oh—yes," cried the suffocated, after a moment's pause. "Oh, I give up Kate, any thing. Spare my life."

"Nay, I will not," shrieked the ghost, with a fresh and real ferocity "but stay, thou shalt see one more sun rise, and then, mark me well, I come and—strangle!"

The voice ceased, the ghost whisked away, but it was long before poor Dick dare peep out from under the counterpane.

It would be hard to describe Kate's feelings when she found horse f once more in the hall, and yet her heart was hot so badly broken.

I have Tom still," said she to herself. "Tom is as weak as Dick, though. Shall I test him, too? If he turn s out like Dick, I shall never trust man again (she was sixteen), and I was so fond of them both. But is was you, dear Tom, and you only, that I love all the time My conscience really always told me that. If Tom is as weak as Dick, it will break my heart. I will not, too, I have not, try him." She turned back to her own room but when she reached the door, she paused again. Then she suddenly left it, and marched resolutely for Tom's apartment.

"I must be honorable," she exclaimed, firmly, "to try one and not the other, is unfair."

Tom, having completed his mere chaunt over "Muddlemarch," had fallen asleep on the lounge as he was

There he lay a great brawny fellow in rather uncouth clothes, but with an expression on his open frank face more astonishing than the most perfect garments

Kate pushed the door and his eyes partially opened

"They met the distressing figure of the defunct governess stretching the air with long black fingers, as in Dick's room.

Tom was fully awake in an instant He sprang to his feet all gazed at the intruder with a glance full of wonder and curiosity. The man-strangler advanced upon him, leering hideously and clutching away at nothing for dear life

Tom did not stir, but stared.

The dead governess approached to within a few feet, and stopped, hesitatingly, her heart was willing her.

The dead governess began to back away toward the door.

"No you don t," shared Tom; "ghost or mortal, I'm not done with you yet" He rushed upon her with open arms, and caught her in the grasp of a Greek wrestler

"O Tom, forgive me, let me go."

The grasp relaxed at once, but it did not let go.

Tom s great arms held the poor little governess, who was sobbing piteously, in a very firm but tender embrace

"I will never let go, Kate, until you promise me something"

"Oh, I know what it is," sobbed the trembling little ghost. "Dear Tom, I always loved you"

Footsteps were heard in the hall, running Something fell heavily against the door The door swung back Poor Dick appeared his eyes staring out of his head, a broken lamp in his hand, his dressing gound about him, his knees shaking.

"O Tom! he grasped, and then the whole situation flashed upon him, his lips puckered, and a very faint and small whistle escaped them

Kate s face was one broad blush on Tom's great breast

Tom s face was one broad smile.

"Thieves!" shrieked Aunt Miranda, from her doorway. "Thieves!"

"Murder!" squalled Matilda, from the attic

"What's the matter? shouted Mr Dexter, from his room

"Only a ghost, I fancy," cried old grand father, grinning from ear to ear, and hurrying from his room.

They all rushed into Tom's room You should have seen the group.

But the little governess, still in Tom's embrace, explained the essential part of this story, and all were satisfied, save, perhaps, Dick.

Glasgow of St. John, Cummings of Boston, Blake of Bangor, Gould of Thomaston, Gerrish and Pettingill of Rumford, Rawson of Bangor, took part The resolutions were then passed. Passed.

Voted to adjourn to meet at the call of the committee. Following is the full text of the Report made by the Committee, together with the Resolutions and Propositions

THE COMMITTEE'S REPORT

To the Creditors of the Consolidated European and North American Railway Company:

Gentlemen: At your meeting, holden on the 28th day of June 1875, the undersigned were appointed a committee to investigate and report upon the condition of the Consolidated European and North American Railway Company, and also a plan for future proceedings of creditors.

Your committee immediately organized by the election of a Chairman and the appointment of three sub-committees, one on the funded debt, one on the floating debt, and one on the condition of the railway and its equipments.

Since that time, we have had several meetings and have done all in our power to hasten the time when we could make a full report, but we have found it impracticable until now, to present any report, which should be at all satisfactory to ourselves or answer the requirements of our appointment.

Without going into particulars of the causes of these delays, which have been quite as annoying to the committee as to the other creditors, we propose to state briefly the conclusions to which we have come and submit our report for your consideration. For reasons, which will present themselves in the course of our report, we have invited, in our call for this meeting, the bond holders as well as floating debt creditors to meet with us that we may mutually confer together upon the affairs of the road and our respective interests therein, and we trust that may be such a spirit of mutual forbearance and conciliation of interests manifested at this meeting as will insure the promotion of the best interests of the Railway as well as of the several classes of creditors

The sub-committee on the railway and its equipment procured the assistance of Messrs. G. F. Hatch, General Manager, and Thomas Holt, Chief Engineer of the Eastern and Maine Central Railroads, and in their company examined carefully the whole line of railway from Bangor to St. John, also the Bangor and Piscataquis Railroad from its junction with the main line to its present terminus in Abbot

For full detailed report of the condition of these roads, we refer to the accompanying reports of Messrs. Hatch and Holt, and we feel assured that your confidence will be increased in the actual value of the roads and their equipments, after reading the results of so careful an examination by gentlemen of so much experience in railway matters.

Your committee only add thereto their own expression of gratification at finding the property in so much better condition than they had anticipated, so fully confirming the reports given by the Hon. S. H. Blake, Railroad Commissioner, as well as the officers of the road at the preliminary meeting.

The reports of the sub-committees on the funded and floating debts exhibit the condition thereof, and we refer to the same as giving the results of much careful and painstaking work.

The latter committee had the assistance of an accomplished accountant, Mr. Sumner, of Rockland, and they express themselves as confident that the results reached have been fully verified and exhibit a substantially correct statement of the condition of the floating debt.

With these preliminaries, we sum up the results reached by us, as follows

The Consolidated European and North American Railway extends from Bangor, Maine, to St. John, New Brunswick, a distance of 306 miles, and with the Bangor and Piscataquis Railway 37 miles long, under its control and practically a portion of its line, embraces a length of 343 miles of railway.

The equipment of the two roads appears to be ample for present needs and your committee do not think it will be advisable or necessary to add materially thereto, pending the time when the gauge of the roads shall be changed, so as to conform to the general railway system of the United States. We recommend that the suggestions of Messrs. Hatch and Holt, relative to needed repairs and improvements, be carefully heeded, and that the track and equipment be kept in good and safe condition to do properly the business of the road, and that such economies as may be made in the equipment be arranged as far as possible so as to be adapted to the change of gauge which must necessarily follow the lengthening of the line to St. John even if it is not required earlier.

The total indebtedness of the Consolidated European and North American Railway Company, including the Bangor and Piscataquis Railroad, is of $7,873,704.86, distributed as follows:
